Accountant charged with unlawful disclosure

2 December 2014

The Corruption and Crime Commission has charged a Perth accountant with three counts of unlawfully disclosing restricted information related to a CCC investigation.

The 67-year-old man is also charged with giving false testimony at a private examination before the Commission in June this year.

The CCC will allege the man disclosed restricted information about the private examination and what he would say prior to his appearance to two other persons of interest in the investigation.

The CCC alleges he also gave false testimony when he appeared before the Commission.

The man is due to appear in Perth Magistrates Court on 10 December.

Three other men were charged last week with unlawfully disclosing restricted information related to the same CCC investigation and are due in court the same day.
